

Senior Designer, Mill Valley, CA

Join us in continuing to build a distinctive American design company.

We are looking for senior designers who also have industrial design and interior architecture experience and want to work at the intersection of those design disciplines. This is a chance to join a diverse team that is working together to build a distinctive American design company.

Henrybuilt senior designers provide a specialized design expertise for projects across the country, working alongside leading architects, designers, and builders to create exceptional spaces and experiences for our clients and their families.

The design work is broad, from concept and approach for all areas of a new home, to developing material palettes and ensuring all elements are impeccably detailed and integrated into the architectural context - and it all gets built, nothing dies on paper. Our designers work closely with clients, creating results that have a direct effect on the lives of the people we work with. And you will be involved in the business, helping to improve the product, and the way we work.

These are the requirements:

- Ability to sense and relate to where the client is coming from, and to understand and manage the variation in perspectives of a client group.
- Ability to transform what you sense from a client and see in the possibilities of a space into a unique and exceptional outcome with a substantial amount of the work done in real time with the client.
- Ability to think on your feet, pick up things quickly, and move through complex work in a way that feels lightweight and enjoyable to the client group.
- 3+ years' experience in an architectural design role. We are looking for people who have been through lots of design cycles, from concept to completion – more so than those who have worked on one or two very long projects.
- Proficiency with AutoCad and other design tools
- Bachelor's degree in architecture, interior design or industrial design
